

AMERICANS WARNED

By President Wilson To Leave Mexico at Once

MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

Revealed How Huerta Provisional Government Had Rejected Friendship of the United States.

President Wilson Wednesday night warned all Americans to leave Mexico at once. At the same time the American embassy and all consular representatives throughout the southern republic were instructed to notify all officials, civil and military, in Mexico, that they would be held strictly responsible for harm or injury done to Americans or their property.

President Woodrow Wilson went to Congress Wednesday and revealed how the Huerta provisional government in Mexico had rejected the friendship of the United States and its effort to aid in the establishment of peace and a government which could be recognized by this nation, and which would be obeyed and respected by Mexico's own people.

In a statement which breathed regret and sympathy in every phrase the President clung tenaciously to optimism as to the ultimate result, notwithstanding the pessimistic facts confronting the two nations. After picturing the hopeless form in which she maintained her position, "isolated and without friends who can effectively aid her," the President announced the necessity of a firm neutral stand by this government, a policy of "hands off" to await the time of Mexico's awakening. He also voiced an urgent appeal for all Americans to leave Mexico and for the United States to aid them in every possible way but, in emphatic language, served notice upon those who assume to exercise authority in the revolution-torn country, that they would be held to a definite reckoning for losses and suffering of American citizens.

The message of the President was received with enthusiastic applause by members of the House and Senate gathered in joint session in the House chamber and Wednesday night the machinery of the government was in motion for making effective the policy of neutrality and "hands off" while the warring factions continue their struggle. To prevent the shipment of arms or munitions of war into any part of Mexico or to any faction, the United States' troops on the border already have been warned to exercise increased vigilance. Whether more troops will be sent to the border is a question to be determined within the next few days. Major General Wood, chief of staff of the army, who has been inspecting the troops in Texas, already is on his way to Washington.

General Wetterspoon, attached to the office of the chief of staff, said that much would depend upon the experience of the next few days on the border in determining upon the order for more troops.

Secretary Bryan planned to confer with President Wilson early Thursday on the subject and the assurance was given that everything necessary would be done to carry out strict neutrality. Secretary Daniels conferred with the President during Wednesday and the Navy Department is ready to dispatch more ships to Mexican waters if required to prevent the shipment of arms to Mexico by sea.

Foreign powers, it was understood, have not been asked to place an embargo on the shipments of munitions of war or arms to Mexico, but the President in his message asserted that this government had been given the generous moral support of foreign nations in the proposals to the Huerta government, which have been rejected. It became known that the administration has under serious consideration the ordering of several thousand more troops to the Mexican border line, and it is said that cabinet members have urged that this be done.

The President's urgent request to Americans in Mexico to leave the country emphasized to Congress the necessity for action upon the recent request of Secretary Bryan for an appropriation of $100,000 with which to aid citizens of the United States in their exodus from the scene of conflict. Such an appropriation is included in a deficiency bill now in the hands of the House Appropriations Committee, and it is expected that action upon it will be hastened. The State Department estimates that there are now in Mexico not more

TO BE RETIRED

After Forty-Seven Years of Faithful Service.

Charles C. Irwin, P. R. R. agent at this place, will be retired from active service with the company next Monday. Mr. Irwin has been in the employ of the P. R. R. for forty-seven years, entering as a student at Mill Creek, Huntingdon County, and later serving as telegraph operator at various other places on the main line.

In 1872, when the Bedford Division was constructed, he was transferred to Hyndman, where he was the agent. In March, 1873, he was removed to Bedford, where he served as clerk in the Superintendent's office and also as telegrapher. Shortly after this he was appointed ticket and freight agent at this place, which position he has held up to the present time.

In the retirement of Mr. Irwin the company loses one of the best and most faithful men in their employ. He was always kind and courteous in his treatment to those with whom he came in contact, and by his fidelity to his work he not only won the confidence and respect of his employers, but of all who knew him. The Gazette, along with Mr. Irwin's many friends, wishes him much joy in his life of retirement.

BEST GAME OF SEASON

Roaring Spring Goes Down to Defeat at the Hands of the Bedford Boys.

The best game of baseball of the season and one of the best ever witnessed on local ball fields was played last Friday afternoon at Northside Park when the local nine defeated the strong team from Roaring Spring, heralded as the champions of Blair County. The game was quick and snappy, only requiring one hour and fifteen minutes, the kind that is not decided until the last man is out, thus keeping the spectators on edge at all times.

The features of the game were the pitching of Burkett, D. Leasure's catch, the playing of Fred Smith at second and the catch of a high fly in deep centre by W. Greene off the bat of Harold Smith, which was the longest drive of the game.

W. Hite, the visiting pitcher, was in a number of tight places during the game, but after the first inning his support was good and several double plays kept the Bedford boys from scoring. O. Burkett, the local twirler, pitched a steady game and after the first inning only one man got beyond first base. One man tried to steal second but was caught ten feet from the bag by Whetstone's good throw.

Many were the complimentary remarks heard on all sides concerning the good playing of both teams. Umpire Dull was complimented by the visiting players for his fair and impartial umpiring. We give below the plays as they were made during the first inning, the only one in which either team did any scoring:

E. Hite first up for the visitors hit to H. Smith, who had some trouble in handling the spotless white ball, and thus one of the enemy occupied the initial bag in safety, but Hite did not think of Burkett's good left arm and soon was caught napping, making the first out; Burkett, the second man up for Roaring Spring, slammed three huge holes in the atmosphere, making two down; Moore, third up, put one through H. Smith for a life and scored on Stevens hit, this being the only run the visitors could push over the plan. Horner, the third out, was easy, flying out to F. Smith.

Allen led off for Bedford and was thrown out by Meyers to E. Hite, Miller followed with a pretty double, took third on H. Smith's single and scored on a passed ball; Smith stole second and scored on H. Burns' hit, this was the end of the scoring for both sides. The tabulated score follows:

How the Editors Get Rich

After a good deal of study and work we have at last figured out why so many country editors get rich. Here is the secret of success: a child is born in the neighborhood, the attending physician gets $25, the editor gives the loud-lunged youngster and the happy parents a "send-off" and gets $50. It is christened; the minister gets $10 and the editor gets $50. It grows up and marries; the editor publishes another long-winded, flowery article and tells a dozen lies about the beautiful and accomplished bride, the minister gets $10 and a piece of cake, the editor gets $500. In the course of time it dies, and the doctor gets from $25 to $100, the minister perhaps gets another $15, the undertaker gets from $50 to $100; the editor publishes a notice of the death and an obituary two columns long, lodge and society resolutions, a lot of poetry and free card of thanks, and gets $5,000. No wonder so many country editors get rich.—Exchange.

Wanted to Get It Right

A traveling salesman died suddenly and was taken to his home in the West. His relatives telephoned the nearest florist, some miles distant, to make a wreath: the ribbon should be extra wide, with the inscription "Rest in Peace" on both sides, and, if there was room, "We Shall Meet in Heaven."

The florist was away, and his new assistant handled the job. It was a startling floral piece which turned up at the funeral. The ribbon was extra wide and bore the inscription:

"Rest in Peace on Both Sides, and if There is Room We Shall Meet in Heaven."—September Lippincott's.

WORDS FROM HOME

Statements That May Be Investigated—Testimony of Bedford Citizens.

When a Bedford citizen comes to the front, telling his friends and neighbors of his experience, you can rely on his sincerity. The statements of people residing in far away places do not command your confidence. Home endorsement is the kind that backs Doan's Kidney Pills. Such testimony is convincing. Investigation proves it true. Below is a statement of a Bedford resident. No stronger proof of merit can be had.

Mrs. D. O. Smith, 234 W. Pitt St., Bedford, Pa., says: "I willingly confirm all I said in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills, when I publicly recommended them some years ago. They brought prompt and permanent relief to one of my family who suffered from kidney trouble. I consider Doan's Kidney Pills worthy of the strongest endorsement."

HOW A MOTOR "TALKS."

The Sympathy That May Come Between the Animate and Inanimate.

"One day my chauffeur was taken ill, and I drove myself in, left the car standing in a side street during the day, and drove home at night," said a suburbanite. "Then, for the first time, I began to sense the feeling of mutuality or mutual sympathy, if such an expression may be permitted between animate and inanimate things, between the machine and myself. Several trips by myself confirmed the sensation; then I bought another car for the family and now drive myself regularly in this one.

"I have often thought of the stories told by locomotive engineers in which their great engines are endowed with almost mental faculties. There are enough of them to fill a book, but I never considered them seriously until I began with this car. Sometimes the engine sings; sometimes it purrs. I know its 'slugs' and its 'purr.' If anything is the matter with it it tells it in a language entirely intelligible to me. It responds to my lightest touch in all its functions, but once," and here his voice became grave, "it refused to run into an unlighted ditch where I was trying to steer it. I looked for half an hour for the trouble with the steering apparatus, but could find nothing wrong."—Suburban Life.

INSTINCT IN PLANTS.

Actions That Seem to Indicate Some Sort of Nervous System.

Plants sometimes appear to possess reasoning power. Charles Darwin instanced the case of the rootlet, which, piercing its way through the soil and detecting a stone or lump of hard clay in its path, will go round it without touching it. "How does the rootlet or plant know that the stone is there?" he asks. "Certainly it cannot see it and as it does not touch it cannot feel it. The avoidance therefore seems to be in the nature of perception of some kind which is a mental operation."

The species of mimosa known as the sensitive plant will contract its leaves even at the sound of a footstep, and when such a plant is being transplanted it crumples up during the process in such a way that it really appears to be suffering from fear. Afterward it recovers and resumes its ordinary mode of life.

Plants undoubtedly possess consciousness of a kind which enables them to carry out certain operations necessary to their preservation, and this can only be done through the possession of some sort of nervous system.—London Standard.

Disraeli's Nuptial Joke.

There was a little joke between them (Disraeli and his wife) which I heard from the late dean of Salisbury. "You know I married you for your money," Disraeli would say to her. "Oh, yes, but if you were to marry me again you would marry me for love." Was the regular reply. "Oh, yes," her husband would exclaim, and the little nuptial comedy ended.

But what Disraeli said to Bernal Osborne once about his marriage is much better worth the telling. It was at a dinner party after dinner when the men were alone. "What did you marry her for?" Osborne asked in his characteristic way. Disraeli twiddled his wineglass in the pause, that followed this point blank inquiry. Then he lifted his head slowly and looked the other very expressively in the face. "For a reason," he said, "which you could never understand—gratitude."—From "Lord Beaconsfield and Other Tory Memories."

Wagner's Music.

By the study of Wagner's master pieces a glimpse of the eternal is had, and once the vision of his truth fills the soul counterfeits are detected instinctively. The polyphony of Bach and the music of "Die Meistersinger" prove the spiritual kinship of Wagner with the founder of modern music. A Beethoven symphony and the "Tristan and Isolde" music demonstrate the common genealogy of the composer from Bonn and the maker of music dramas, but listen to the Strauss music from "Salome" when the prophet is being murdered in the well and then hear the mighty tone structure of the last scene from "Gotterdammerung" and observe that Strauss shrieks while Wagner chants.—San Francisco Call.

The Coach and Four Came.

Among the many records of Harrow school is that of a boy, the son of a poor local tradesman in a very small way of business. His schoolfellows often taunted him about his family poverty. Their thoughtless jeers, although hurting his feelings, drew from the lad the retort, "I intend before I die to ride in a coach and four." The years sped by, and, lo and behold, the poverty stricken youngster of Harrow had developed into Dr. Parr, the greatest scholar of his time, whose customary and favorite means of locomotion was a coach and four.—London Mail.

Came Near It.

A New England farmer was once describing in the presence of a very humane person the great age and debility of a horse that he formerly owned and used. "You ought to have killed him," interrupted the humane person indignantly. "Well," drawled the farmer, "we did—almost."

Myrtle—Look what a lovely diamond engagement ring George has given me. Estelle—Yes, it's lovely. It nearly broke my heart when I sent it back to him.

Captain Pembroke and Mr. Effingham

By JULIUS M'BRIDE

Captain George Pembroke of the royal engineers, when there were British troops stationed in Canada, wrote his fiancée that he was ordered home to England. The lady, Emily Collins, who was a New Yorker, was somewhat surprised at a request made in the letter that she should sail from that city, meet him in London and marry him there. Miss Collins would have considered this an impertinence, but, reading further, saw that the order was imperative that the officer report at once, and, since a steamer sailed from Montreal the evening he received it, he would sail with her.

Now, this was all a tissue of deception. Pembroke, ten years before a young lieutenant, had met Miss Collins, a girl of seventeen, in England; had flirted with her, but the two had drifted apart. After he came to Canada he opened a correspondence with her that led to an engagement. Instead of sailing from Montreal he purposed going across from New York and in the same steamer as his fiancée. Having grown ten years older and raised a full beard, he did not believe she would recognize him. He would endeavor to win her under another name, then confess that he was Pembroke himself.

This was a pretty scheme—that is, if he succeeded in winning the girl away from himself.

When the ship sailed in which Miss Collins was to go to England, Captain Pembroke in mufti, under the name of Guy Effingham, was on board. He was a handsome fellow, of an aristocratic bearing and quite a lady killer. He did not recognize Miss Collins, who had considerably changed, but succeeded in securing some one to point her out to him. An introduction was secured, and the captain and his fiancée were soon sitting next each other on deck in steamer chairs engaged in a desperate flirtation.

The word flirtation is generally used in connection with women, and we do not associate it with persons on the lee side of middle age. But both Pembroke and Miss Collins were flirts.

The night before reaching port while steaming up the channel the captain gave Miss Collins a fictitious account of himself, stating that he was related to a duke; that he had an income of £8,000 a year and was going home to stand for parliament.

Having thus prepared the way, he told her that the moment he saw her on the day they sailed he knew that she was destined to have a marked effect upon his subsequent life and he had since realized that he was madly in love with her. Then he offered her his heart and hand. She hid her face on his bosom and whispered "Yes."

Pembroke was shocked. It was not that he had won the lady from himself, but that she should show so little sense of honor in thus deserting one man for another. He expected that she would say something about complications with another lover, but she maintained silence on the subject, and he could see no evidence of the slightest qualm of conscience at her dishonorable conduct.

Pembroke, of course, knew where he could find Miss Collins in London, but he asked for her address and when he received it put it carefully in his pocketbook. When they separated it was understood that he should call the evening of his arrival. The final parting took place on the upper deck behind a great wind funnel, where there was no one to see. So exuberant was the caress he received that he went away as delighted with his success as Guy Effingham as he was enraged at the treatment of George Pembroke.

"You'll not disappoint me tomorrow evening," she said. "Will you?"

"Certainly not. Why do you doubt me?"

"You men are so uncertain. I have known you only ten days. It seems that my happiness is too intense to be real. I must be dreaming."

"I assure you mine surpasses it."

"Well, then, goodbye. I shall expect you early."

Miss Collins was to go to London with her people, while Pembroke went alone. On the way it seemed to him that he had been caught in a whirlwind that had turned him not only completely round, but upside down. What should he do? Accept the slight put upon him as Pembroke and give way to the ecstasy experienced by Effingham, or, as Pembroke, hurl back the love she had lavished on Effingham? He was not quite sure whether he was a jilted or an accepted lover.

When he went to see her in London he had not made up his mind what course he would pursue. When she advanced to receive him his heart fluttered. Throwing her arms about him, she looked up into his face with a glad smile and said:

"Oh, George, dearest George, how happy I am to be with you again!"

"George?"

"Yes, George."

"You know?"

"Your personating another to win me again was just too lovely for anything."

"But—how did you know?"

"Stupid! I recognized you long before you saw me at all."

"Well, well, what a donkey I have been! Do you know I've been half crazy as myself and in the seventh heaven as the other fellow."

"And just think I have been loved by two different men at the same time. It was delicious."

BATTLES IN THE BLOOD.

Antitoxins Fight the Germs of Their Particular Disease.

When any animal has a certain disease its body produces large quantities of the particular antitoxin that will fight that disease. If the blood of this animal be introduced into another animal the latter will get the disease, but in a milder form, and will at the same time be stimulated to secrete large quantities of the antitoxin. It is now capable of resisting an attack by an army of powerful germs and becomes "immune" to the real disease.

If its blood be drawn and filtered to free it from red and white corpuscles the serum that is left is merely the watery part of the blood heavily charged with the antitoxins of that disease. This, injected into the blood of a person suffering from it, re-enforces the antitoxins already there and speedily routs the enemy by neutralizing the poisons that the toxic germs are liberating.

Serum is prepared in two ways—one by taking it from the blood of another animal, the other by a culture from the blood of the patient himself.

There are only one or two diseases that can be cured by medicine. In all others the medicine is given merely to stimulate the natural production of antitoxins. If we knew how to make an antitoxin for every disease we should have no more use for medicine. The number of diseases for which antitoxins are being discovered is multiplying year by year.—New York World.

FRISKY SENATE PAGES.

They Are Great Mimics and Discuss Burlesque Legislation.

They are the greatest mimics in the world. They can take off the idiosyncrasies and humorous peculiarities of the senators to a "T."

Sometimes when the senate is not sitting and too many visitors and page bosses are not around to observe the proceedings the pages themselves go into a solemn senatorial session. One will impersonate the vice president, another the chief clerk, and so on. Various other boys will pretend to be either their favorite senators or the senators of home states. Each boy occupies the seat to which the real senator is entitled.

Bang! goes the vice president's gavel, and the extraordinary session of pages has convened. There is always an argument as to which senator shall be recognized when the regular order of business is reached. Every conceivable current subject is discussed, with a goodly sprinkling of "baseball legislation," which always carries with it a rider by which each page senator shall be entitled to an annual self-renewing pass for all the season's games.

A bill which is almost sure to be introduced is one which proposes to increase the salaries of the pages and shorten their hours of duty.—Robert D. Heine in Leslie's Weekly.

Hit Them Both.

"You remember old Si Collins, what used to be around here last season, don't you?" remarked the station master at Seekonk.

"You mean the chap that always had a way of doing things differently from any one else?"

"That's the feller," replied the station master. "Well, he committed suicide 'bout a month ago."

"Why, that's terrible! But did he do that differently too?"

"Differently?" ejaculated the station master. "Why, I should say he did. Say, that feller went out and bought a couple of quarts of gasoline, drank her down, then lighted up his old clay pipe and started a-smoking. The folks hereabout wanted to have services held over the remains; but, Lor', all we ever found was a section of Si's old vest that somehow got ketchup in a tree. Well, Si was bound to do things different."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Checking It Up to Father.

That parents should exercise the greatest care in speaking of family secrets in the presence of little children was proved by the experience of a North avenue resident recently.

The man in question was visiting a maiden aunt, who is extremely stout and very sensitive about it.

A four-year-old boy who accompanied his father looked very carefully at the rotund form of his relative and then inquired, with a friendly smile:

"Aunt Myrtle, you don't have to put ashes in the bed to keep from slipping out, do you?"

Then when the man held up his hands in consternation the youngster exclaimed:

"There, papa; she says she doesn't."—Youngstown Telegram.

Fun In Space.

I dreamed last night that I was present at a committee meeting of the sun, earth, moon and stars.

"I'm no coward," said the earth.

"No, but you have two great fears," said the sun hotly.

"And those are?"

"The hemispheres."

"You've forgotten the atmosphere," put in the moon. And the comet, who had no business to be there, wagged his tail with joy.

Two Serious Matters.

"There are two things," remarked Fog in a contemplative mood, "that I don't understand. One of these is, how the world got along before I came into it, and the other, how it is going to get along after I have left it."—London Opinion.

A MISTAKE

A Story For Labor Day

By DORETHA HALE

Little Mamie Swift was taken very ill in the night, and her father was called up to go for the doctor. Swift feared the child would die and began to trot. From trotting he increased his pace to a run.

He heard footsteps behind him, and they were gaining on him. But he thought nothing about it, for his mind was on his sick child. Suddenly the pursuer clapped a hand on his shoulder and handcuffs on his wrist.

"What's this?" he asked, astonished. "You're wanted," replied a policeman.

"Let me go. My child is sick, and I must get a doctor."

"Oh, the doctor racket has been worked too often. It's no good."

Swift was in agony, but could do nothing. He was taken to a police station, where a complaint of burglary was entered against him. A woman came to the station, looked at the prisoner and said, "That's the man," and went away.

Meanwhile the mother waited for the return of her husband with the doctor. Morning came, but neither Swift nor the doctor came. As the sun rose the child died. Then to complete the mother's agony word came from her husband that while running for the doctor he had been mistaken for a burglar and arrested.

During the day the tolls tightened around Swift. The rogues' gallery was ransacked for his picture, and the photograph of a criminal named Jack Downen, who was the image of Swift, was found. The woman who had identified the prisoner the night before looked at him again and was sure it was the man she had caught opening her bureau drawers and, on being discovered, had run.

There was never a clearer case against a man. Had he been a gentleman he could have proved that burglary was not in his line, but he was a plain workingman and could only prove that his name was on the rolls of the Carpenters' union in good and regular standing. But this did not save him. He was convicted of burglary and sentenced to six years in state prison.

The day he was sent up his wife came to see him. She knew he was innocent and had sworn that he had been with her five minutes before the alleged burglary had been committed and that he had left her to go for a doctor to attend their sick child. The story would have elicited sympathy if it had been believed, but it was not. What was the testimony of a burglar's wife worth? Nothing.

"Well, Tom," she said to him, "this is hard, isn't it?"

"Yes, Mary, it is."

"Why don't they find a way to avoid such mistakes?"

"I don't know. I suppose they can't."

"Maybe some day the union will have persons whose business it will be to ferret out such cases as appear among their members."

"I hope it will."

"Well, Tom, keep up a good heart. I'll work for the children."

The convict was too disheartened to make any response to his wife's hopefulness. All he said was if he'd been let go on for the doctor the child might be alive now.

Swift had served a year in prison when one night a burglar was caught red handed in a burglary. He happened to be taken to the same station Swift had been taken when arrested on his way for the doctor. The man at the desk looked at him in surprise.

"Great Scott, man," he exclaimed, "I hadn't heard of your breaking jail!"

"I haven't broken jail," said the man sullenly.

"You were sent up a year ago—that I'll swear to. What's your name?"

"Oh, I'm Patsy Wolf. I might as well own up. I've been before the court so many times I couldn't fool anybody. Besides, my mug is in the gallery."

The sergeant looked puzzled.

"Take him in and lock him up," he said. "I'll find out about the matter in the morning."

The next day he learned that Thomas Swift, the man he supposed Patsy Wolf to be, was at the penitentiary. The picture in the rogues' gallery was examined, and it was found that it might be the likeness of either one of the men. It began to dawn on the police that they had made a mistake.

A month later, after a great deal of red tape had been untied, on the morning of Labor Day, Tom Swift was discharged from prison, and, having reached the city where he had left his family, he saw his companion, laborers marching. He stood for a moment watching them, muttering to himself:

"You've lots to do, boys, besides getting better wages. You've got to get that when one of your number gets into trouble with the law and is innocent there'll be detectives to find out where the guilt lies."

When Tom reached home he found that his wife had about come to the end of her rope and could not have carried the burden any longer.

"How did they get you out, Tom?" she asked.

"The governor pardoned me."

"And will they punish those who put you there for not taking more care?"

"No. They'll be punished in another world, and maybe they're not to blame. I don't know."

Retired Georgia Planter's Advice to Kidney Sufferers

Regarding the wonderful curative merits of your Swamp-Root, I cannot say too much. After suffering severely for three years or more with severe pains caused by weak kidneys, I was finally induced to try Swamp-Root through a testimonial I read in one of the newspapers. I was in such a condition that I was obliged to arise from my bed six or eight times every night. I purchased a fifty-cent bottle and before it was used I felt so much relief that I purchased a one-dollar bottle and, by the time this was taken the old pains had left my back and I could sleep the whole night through. I am a retired planter, 70 years of age, and owing to Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, I am in the best of health and feel like a boy. I am always glad to recommend Swamp-Root to those who are in need of it. Sincerely yours,

C. E. USSERY, Bowersville, Ga.

Personally appeared before me, this 8th of September, 1909, C. E. USSERY, who subscribed the above statement and made oath that the same is true in substance and in fact.

MARIA'S MONEY

She Drew Too Much on Her Imagination

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Maria Bevis dusted the glass showcase in her little store, piled the bolts of percale and gingham neatly on the shelves, hung some imitation lace collars in the window and unlocked the door for the day's business.

Behind the store, which was the front parlor of her house, were the rooms where Maria lived.

As she sat at the window waiting for customers she saw a girlish form hurry past and enter the grocery store. Maria Bevis smiled sourly.

"Shiftless," she muttered, snatching irritably at the red yarn of her ball. "If that ain't just like Amy Lane. Probably just got out of bed and gone to the store for something for breakfast! I never could believe Cousin Sam's daughter could be so different from me! Bevises have always been thrifty and hardworking. Somehow Amy Bevis was different; then she went and married Howard Lane, and everybody knows it's starvation business running a country newspaper. But—"

The door swung inward with jangling bell, and a little, black-eyed, white-haired woman hopped in like a sparrow and perched on a chair.

"Well, Maria, how goes it?" twittered Ida Ramsell girlishly.

"I'm all right, Ida," returned Maria dryly. "Going out to sew today?"

"Yes—up to Mrs. Bremer's. I'll want two yards of slate colored silesia and two spools of black thread No. 60, I guess. Just saw Amy," remarked Ida.

"So did I."

"Amy looks sick, Maria."

"Probably she eats too much pastry. I hear she lives out of the bakery," sniffed Maria, squinting nearsightedly into a box of thread.

"They are having a hard time to get along," murmured Ida kindly.

"Humph! Howard better go to work and do something that will bring in real money. I never dreamed when I lent that money to Amy's father that he would die without a penny. When I spoke to her about it she and Howard—" up and promised to pay every cent, with interest."

"I heard they said they would pay compound interest."

Maria flushed. "You do hear a lot of trashy talk, Ida! Howard did say that, but he said it was a mistake."

but the one payment on the interest. I never expect to get the rest."

"I expect it's a good deal for you to lose," suggested Ida inquisitively.

"That's a personal matter," returned Maria stiffly. "It's enough that I lent it to Cousin Sammy, and he gave me the note for it payable on demand. Amy and Howard have promised to pay it. But, land, I've given it up!"

"Folks say you don't speak to Amy and Howard now," ventured Ida Ramsell as she arose to go.

"For once folks are right. I told 'em I didn't hold to keeping acquaintance with cheats."

"Maria!" For once Ida's sharp voice was warmly sympathetic for young Howard Lane and his wife, Amy. Swiftly she changed the topic. "Mr. Busby told me to tell you that you were appointed one of the delegates to the convention at Ripple River. There'll be twenty-five churches represented. Mrs. Bremer's another. I suppose you'll go?"

"Go nowhere!" cried Maria bitterly. "I can't afford to. Ida! If Amy would pay me that money I could go."

"Well, I'm sorry. Goodbye," said Ida hurriedly, and the door jangled after her. "My," she breathed as she slipped down the street. "Maria must have lent them a lot of money! When I think of all the things she's wanted to do and couldn't because of the money tied up in that family loan I feel's if she was a martyr."

Ida Ramsell repeated that remark the next afternoon at the sewing society, and a buzz of laughter went around the group of busy women.

"It must be thousands of dollars," observed Mrs. Bremer quietly, "although I never could understand how Maria Bevis could get hold of very much to lend. I remember, when I went into black for Mr. Bremer, I offered to sell her my new garnet silk, but Maria said she couldn't afford it just then; she'd lent every penny to Sammy's folks and they hadn't paid her back."

"Too bad of her to talk so much about it," said the minister's wife. "Family affairs are best kept in the family."

"That's what I'm always telling Maria," chirruped Ida Ramsell, sewing jerkily. "But she will gabble about it. Does seem's if her milk of human kindness was turned to vinegar and she just rejoiced in gettings slaps at Howard and Amy."

"I wonder how the baby is," murmured Mrs. Busby, the minister's wife.

"Better, so Amy said when I ran in there yesterday. Seems they had trouble with the milk from Long's Howard wants to buy a cow, but I guess he doesn't dare to until they pay Maria."

That same night Amy and Howard Lane sat in their garden and talked of the future and played with Joyce, who seemed much better. From a tent on the green came sounds of laughter and threads of music, where a fair was in full swing.

Howard's arm was around Amy's waist. "Dear, if you hadn't married me you might have been over there enjoying yourself," he said, a little bitterly. "Now you are ashamed to go because you haven't got decent shoes to wear and because if you spent a penny Cousin Maria would frown and call us—"

"Cheats," finished Amy, with a little laugh. "Never mind, Howard. I've been to lots of fairs, and I've got you and baby, and that's enough for any girl. Only I do wish we could pay Cousin Maria's note."

They started to go into the house when a man entered the front gate and came briskly toward them. "Mr. and Mrs. Howard Lane?" he asked abruptly.

"Yes," said Howard.

"I'm Tobias Bevis—Maria's brother. Guess you've heard of me from your father. Amy, ain't it? You was a little girl when I went away. Your father, my Cousin Sammy, mortgaged his house for $1,000 to send me to California to get back my health. Well, I got it back and went to Australia, and I've been making money. I've brought back Cousin Sammy's money with compound interest. It's here in this packet. I'm sorry I couldn't give it to him direct. He was one of the best men in the world."

The man's voice trembled as he finished speaking.

Without questioning why this long delayed loan was only now being repaid, Howard and Amy ushered Tobias Bevis into the house and listened to his story.

"I came here first, Maria wasn't home, and I went to the minister, Mr. Busby, and he gave me the particulars of Cousin Sammy's death. I'm sorry, Amy, that your father lost his home on account of me, but I'll make it up, if I can, to this little girl of yours. Did you say her name was Joyce?"

He played with the baby while Amy and Howard counted the money with trembling fingers and unbelieving eyes. Twenty-two hundred dollars! What wealth! Perhaps there would be enough left after Cousin Maria's awful debt was paid to give them a fair start in the world. Paying the interest had always kept them back.

"We must go tonight," whispered Amy, and Howard nodded assent.

Tobias promised to care for the baby until their return, and the happy pair hastened to Maria's house, where they found that splinter in a state of perturbation over the discovery of a man's leather suit case on her front piazza.

"What in time has happened?" she asked tartly as she ushered them into her sitting room.

"We've come to pay the note," said Amy proudly. "Will you please bring it at once, Cousin Maria? We must get it off our minds."

"With compound interest," added Howard.

Maria looked at them blankly. She had never expected the note to be paid, and she had not looked at it for years.

Slowly she walked to the china closet and took down a large blue china teapot. She thrust her hand in the top and drew out a bundle of yellowed papers.

Her spectacled eyes selected one and brought it to the table and laid it on the red cover. "There it is," she said skeptically. "Do you want to pay the whole of it?"

"I hope it isn't over $2,000," whispered Amy prayerfully as she turned over the note.

She stared uncomprehendingly at it and gave it to her husband. "What does it say?" she whispered tensely.

Howard read and his face flushed.

"Cousin Maria, do you mean to say that this note is only for $25—that that is all Father Bevis borrowed from you?" he demanded hotly.

Maria nodded dazedly. "I guess that's right," she said sheepishly. "Somehow I got to thinking how many things I could do with that money. It got to seem like a whole lot. I—I—"

She paused helplessly, while Howard counted out $30 and pushed it across the table. Then he caught up the note and set a lighted match to it. When it crumbled to ashes he looked across the blacked fragments on the red cloth into Maria's scared eyes.

"Maria! Bevis," he said gravely, "you've spoiled the three years of our married life, all for that paltry little sum. It is paid in full. How are you going to pay us back for the agony you have caused us? You have made us the laughingstock of the village and—"

"Don't Howard," said Amy softly. "Please don't. She is sorry."

"What would Rippledale say if it knew how much we really owed you?" Howard added remorselessly.

Maria's head dropped into her hands. "Tell 'em," she sniffed miserably. "I don't blame you one mite!"

There was silence. Then Howard spoke abruptly. "We won't tell a word, Maria. People may think what they please about the amount, but it is your place to inform every one that the note is paid, the debt is canceled. Will you do it?"

"Yes," cried Maria fervently. "I'll tell 'em tomorrow at the missionary meeting, and I don't suppose you'll ever have much to do with me again!"

"Nonsense," said Amy brightly. "I'm coming over tomorrow morning with baby to buy something for new little dresses and we will have a cozy chat."

But Maria Bevis punished herself in her own way. When her brother Tobias came in and surprised her by his sudden arrival she told him the whole story, and any one who knew Maria Bevis and realized how she worshiped this young brother might understand that Maria Bevis was not too old to learn a lesson.

FOR PHEASANT FANCIERS.

In natural habitat, Mrs. Pheasant forms her nest of leaves and grasses in a secluded nook and always covers her eggs with leaves when off the nest to hide them from prying eyes prospecting for prey.

In confinement eggs are apt to be dropped at random and these must be quickly gathered for, where there is small range. Mr. Pheasant, especially, often develops a voracious appetite for eggs.

Brushy pine placed in corners, or secluded places, where a nest is fashioned and in which small glass eggs are kept, will often lead the hen to hide away to lay. The wild pheasants' eggs invariably hatch in twenty-four days, but in confinement they hatch in from twenty-two to twenty-seven days.

The chicks run as soon as dried off and must be protected, for the pheasants of the flock often kill them.

Fanciers raise most of their tame pheasants with chicken mothers, the Silky being best for the purpose, as it is right size, gentle and does not quit the young to lay so soon. Hens with scaly and feathered legs should be avoided.

Some use turkey mothers, their habits being about the same.

The young require sanitary surroundings or gaps and other ailments result, and they must be kept free from lice.

They require roomy coops without doors, to be moved on to fresh ground twice a day and should run in outside screens until old enough to range.

They are fed first three times a day. Barley meal, hard boiled eggs, screened and mixed with breadcrumbs and chopped lettuce make a good ration.

Ants' eggs are excellent. As a substitute some use custard made of an egg and tablespoonful of milk beaten together.

Crushed hemp, millet and coarse cornmeal add variety.

Some feed maggots. They are nasty and risky to feed. Meal worms are better.

Simply place a few meal worms in wheat midds and bran with a few pieces of leather mixed through it and you soon have plenty of fat, clean, yellow worms for pheasants and other insect loving pets.

DON'TS.

Don't try to discourse on a subject of which you know but little. Better be a clam than an ass.

Don't sow wild oats, and don't depend much on government seed.

Don't pretend to be an agriculturist when you do not keep posted on modern methods and put them to practice.

Don't let chicks run on cement. For egg troubles put them on the ground and cut out forcing food.

Don't expect to raise good chicks without green food. White clover makes them grow all over.

Don't neglect to scald vessels often in which you serve milk to chicks.

Don't have brush nor lumber piles near the hen-coops to afford harbor for varmints in a prey on poultry.

THE ROLLING STONE.

There is an old saying—it surely is true—that a rolling stone gathers no moss. Indeed, when a stone goes rolling about it is sure to meet with a loss.

A piece breaks off here, a corner cracks there.

And often to powder 'tis ground, until at the end of its rolling about 'No vestige of it may be found.

And this is all true of the changeable jack.

Who is ever changing his trade. He knows just a little of any old thing. But by him no progress is made.

For "a jack of all trades is a master of none,"

And such tinkers can't thrive today. It's the man who's an expert, a specialist, now.

To whom fortune gives right of way. The same with the fellow who changes his job.

Who floats everywhere with the tide. He's like an old hulk that floats here and there.

With never a place to abide.

But the ladder of fame is straight as a die. And he who would get to the top Must hustle and bustle and stick to the rungs.

Climb on and climb up and not stop. C. M. BARNITZ.

KURIOS FROM KORRESPONDENTS

Q. Does it require exactly twenty-one days to hatch chicks? A. Highly fertilized eggs often pip on the nineteenth day, and their chicks come out on the twentieth. Chicks should be out and dry by evening of twenty-first unless a cold snap retards or overheat causes chicks to kick out prematurely.

Q. Is it necessary to have litter on the scratch floor in the warm season. A. Yes. Litter keeps the floor clean, and there are stormy days, long rains, when hens should be kept in, and grain in the litter keeps them busy exercising. This especially applies in states where the rainy season prevails. Water soaked hens are subject to intestinal colds, and they work havoc.

Q. Are brown shelled eggs richer than white? How far may eggs be shipped for hatching? A. No. Distance doesn't count if they are packed and handled right, do not undergo cold or heat, are fresh at the start and are not on the road too long. They are now shipped from London to New York, from California to Maine and yet hatch a good average.

Q. Can you see a germ in an egg without its being under incubation? A. Yes, by breaking the shell and examining contents with a strong microscope.

Q. Is there any difference in the food value and quality of a green and white duck egg? A. None.

Q. Will washing add to the appearance of a Barred Rock for exhibition? A. Yes; it removes dust and any filth and makes the white bars, clears and adds gloss. The face, comb wattles, shanks, feet must be washed, so why not make a complete job of it while you are at it?

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS.

Whenever May Irwin, who plays in "Mme. Sherry," gets symptoms of a brainstorm she lies herself away to Ridgeville, N. J., where her sister, Flo Irwin, a retired actress, has a poultry farm that produces 1,500 eggs a week.

Every breed has its distinctive shape, and every variety of a breed must carry that shape to be true to the name. Study breed shape, and keep your birds up to the dot.

English and German markets receive much poultry and eggs from the Balkan states. The effects of the Balkan war were especially felt at Christmas time, when both markets were short on turkeys, geese and eggs, and unheard of prices ruled.

There is a prejudice held by some people against geese as an article of diet. Some object to picking them, others to the fat. An old, fat, strong goose isn't an epicurean delight, and if a man gets his first taste from a greasy antique it doesn't taste for more, but if it's a smooth, milk fattened, tender green gosling that's certainly a toothsome, delicious goose of another color.

A gamecock belonging to Alderman Schutz of Hammond, Ill., was arrested for licking Duke, a bulldog belonging to Michael Marlmont. The rooster fought the cop who arrested him and when arraigned before Judge Burnett crowded so loud the judge couldn't hear himself think. The judge dismissed the case and praised the rooster for licking the pup.

Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Texas, Kansas, Indiana and Ohio raise over 40 per cent of the poultry in the United States. Will our old blue stocking eastern states please wake up and take notice.

We don't know the poultry high-brow who originated the theory that Mother Hen is responsible for the white diarrhea germ and her eggs bear this microbe that kills millions of chicks per year, but it remains for him to explain why you very, very seldom see a case among chicks hatched as good old Mother Hen only can do it. Let these highbrows own up that it's an incubator nature fake defect and then get to work and make a machine that won't do it.

New Yorkers are great chicken eaters. Their last year's poultry bill was over $20,000,000, or about $4.50 per head. New Yorkers are great on egg breakfasts and egg nog and used not only the home product last year, but millions of outside eggs. Please note also that she is appropriating more money than any other state for poultry culture and intends to raise all her own poultry and eggs in the near future also.

than 15,000 Americans, whereas there were 60,000 several years ago. In Mexico City it is estimated that there are less than 2,000 Americans today.

The diplomatic relations between the two countries, it is understood, will remain as they are at present, each country maintaining an embassy without official recognition, presided over by a charge d'affaires. Though the President made it plain in his statement that all negotiations thus far have come to naught and the message of Foreign Minister Gamboa, rejecting for the Huerta government the American proposals, left no room for doubt as to the situation, the way is open for future negotiations either at the initiative of Mexico or the United States. Meanwhile Nelson O'Shaughnessy probably will remain in Mexico City in charge of the American embassy. John Lind, the President's personal representative, still is in Vera Cruz and probably will remain there as long as there is any possible chance for a renewal of negotiations.

In his message, which was in the nature of an appeal to the moral forces of this and foreign nations, the President made it clear that he based high hope upon the effect of the announcement of this government's policy will have upon, not only the people of this country and the governments of other nations, but upon the people of Mexico themselves.

Now that the United States has exhausted the efforts to bring about peace and a stable government, the President believes that this government's example to the world will avail great good in the end.

"The steady pressure of moral force," he said, "will before many days break the barriers of pride and prejudice down, and we shall triumph as Mexico's friends sooner than we could triumph as her enemies—and how much more handsomely, with how much brighter satisfaction of conscience and of honor."

The President told Congress that everything this nation did in the situation confronting it must be "rooted in patience and done with calm, disinterested deliberation."

He had no word of rebuke for Mexico and reached the determination to maintain strict neutrality after having presented the whole situation to the members of the foreign relations committee in Congress. Not an essential detail did the President withhold in his presentation of the case for the public, publishing also to the world the reply of the Mexican government to Mr. Lind in which Senor Gamboa refers to the American proposals as "humiliating," denies the representation by President Wilson that Mexico had not made progress toward peace and, although expressing appreciation of the avowed friendly intent of the United States, declares that "if such good offices are to be of the character of those now tendered us we should have to decline them in the most categorical and definite manner." Everything that Mexico had said to this government in response to the proposals was made public, including the Huerta alternative that nothing could be welcomed except unrestricted recognition of his government.

After he had concluded his message and listened to the applause which greeted it, the President turned toward the White House to await its effect. He believes that it will be beneficial.

TUBERCULOSIS DAY

Churches and Schools Will Observe Great National Movement.

Churches, schools, labor unions, fraternal orders and other organizations to the number of 200,000 at least will be asked to join the anti-tuberculosis workers of the country in the observance of the Fourth National Tuberculosis Day, which has been designated for December 7th, according to an announcement issued yesterday by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

The movement will be furthered throughout the country by more than 1,000 anti-tuberculosis societies working through various state organizations and The National Association. Personal appeals will be made to clergymen, school principals and leaders of various organizations urging them to set aside a definite time during the week preceding or the week following December 7th, for a lecture on tuberculosis.

Last year over 60,000 churches gave attention to this subject on Tuberculosis Day. It is hoped this year to swell the number of churches to 100,000 and to urge similar action besides in a large number of the schools and other societies. The Tuberculosis Day Campaign will come this year during the Red Cross Christmas Seal sale. It is planned to urge the churches of the country to take a definite part in this movement.

The observance of Tuberculosis Day was endorsed last year by President Taft, Cardinal Farley, Colonel Roosevelt and many prominent churchmen and public officials. Proclamations calling upon the people to observe this day were issued by Governors of more than a dozen states and by the Mayors of a considerable number of cities.

Family Reunion

The family of John Chamberlain held a reunion last Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain are the parents of seventeen children. Ten of these are living and all were present at the reunion. Of these nine are married and had their families present. The family of Eli Chamberlain, deceased, was also present. Besides the family J. M. Thomas and wife and Rev. F. W. McGuire were present.

The reunion was held under the trees near the home of the father and mother at Six Mile Run. The Chamberlain Quartet furnished delightful music, and refreshments were served. The day was delightfully spent. The entire family live within a radius of a few miles of the home except Miss Pearle, who is a trained nurse of New York City.

Mann's Choice

August 27—A very pleasant surprise party was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bloomer on August 25 in honor of the birthday of their daughter, Miss Marian. Marian was the recipient of many pretty gifts. The guests were entertained by music and various games were played. Those present were Misses Hester and Laura Amick, Mabel and Esther Kaufman, Marian Bloomer, Mary Sams, Nellie Clark, Della Miller, Gertrude Oylor, Rose Rudy, Lelia Whetstone, Pauline Rudy and Josephine Struckman, of Mann's Choice; Florence Cappellet of Bedford, Emily Whetstone of Johnstown, Cora Michael of Barton, Md., and Gladys Lybarger of Seneca; Ben Gump, Francis Adair, William Adair, George Lybarger, William Miller, Rudy Crissey, Ross Mortimore, Lewis Bloomer and Ross Miller, of Mann's Choice. At a late hour a dainty lunch was served, after which the guests departed, wishing Marian many more happy birthdays.

W. B. Souser, wife and four children have returned to their home in Johnstown, after spending ten days with the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Paupel.

Mrs. Sarah Feight of Bedford is spending a few days with her daughter, Mrs. F. M. Suters.

Clyde Holler and wife, of Lancaster, are visiting friends at this place. Our former high school principal, H. H. DeLong, is visiting in town on route to Somerset, where he has been elected principal of the schools.

Misses Mabel and Sadie Kaufman are spending a few days with their friend, Miss Alta Diehl, of Buffalo Mills.

Rev. Charles Rupp, wife and children, of Catawissa, are spending their vacation with the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Sams.

Miss Evelyn Reiley is visiting her brother, G. A. Reiley, of Huntingdon.

Donald Garber and sister, Miss Edna, and Miss Mary Hansford, who spent the past three weeks visiting at the home of Aaron M. Miller, returned to their home at Parsons, W. Va., on Saturday.

Rev. E. A. Snook attended the funeral of Mrs. Moffatt, wife of Rev. J. E. Moffatt, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Cumberland, on Monday.

Miss Alma Oylor of Pittsburgh is spending her vacation with her father, J. W. Oylor.

J. H. Stambaugh

John Henry (Harry) Stambaugh died at his home at St. Clairsville on Wednesday, August 13, 1913, aged 34 years, nine months and 30 days.

While the shadows of his life were still pointing toward the west, with but not quite one-half of the allotted story of man's life told, he became tired and weary of the ills of his misfortune and lay down by the wayside to rest, perhaps mistaking the approach of death for the return of health. He died having been of ill health for the past nine years; he additionally developed a case of typhoid fever about eight weeks before.

J. H. STAMBAUGH

Recovering from fever, he still lingered bedfast awhile, and almost without the least symptom to foretell the end, he passed away. A post-mortem examination revealed a condition of badly ulcerated bowels and stomach, having been more or less a chronic sufferer of the latter for a few years.

To enumerate briefly some things with which he was identified, will perhaps at this time present remembrance in one phase or the other. He was a member of St. Peter's Lutheran Church at St. Clairsville, a teacher in that Sunday School, and an ex-president of their missionary society. As a musician he possessed more than ordinary ability, being a member of the Osterberg Band in the capacity of slide trombonist and general utility man, figuring as a saxophone player in the Sunday School Orchestra, and a tenor singer in the choir and local male quartets. He also played the trombone in Prof. S. H. Koontz's day orchestra at the Bedford County Teachers' Institute the last few years, having taught school in this county six years under the superintendency of Ex-Superintendent J. Anson Wright.

For the past seven years his office was that of postmaster in the borough of St. Clairsville, where he served in addition as a general bureau of information on all current topics. He possessed a noticeable taste for the better class of literature, believing that the kind and quality of reading matter selected and read by man was the best criterion of the man himself. He took great pride in his library which was well kept and read. Washington Irving was his favorite author.

He is survived by his wife, Agnes Agarise Stambaugh, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Stambaugh, of St. Clairsville, and four brothers, Calvin, George, Wesley and Bruce Stambaugh, of St. Clairsville, and two sisters, Mrs. John F. Fetter of St. Clairsville and Mrs. Albert Reighard of Bedford R. D. 2.

And while these lines are perhaps our last tributes of respect, they must be for us and not for him.

The few poor rites which man can pay.

Are felt not by the silent sleeper;

The dead unconscious ear of clay

Hears not the living weeper.

Mrs. Diemman Conner

Mrs. Diemman Conner, widow of the late Isaac Conner, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Joseph Price, of Clear Ridge in East Providence Township Saturday morning, August 16, aged 62 years. Her maiden name was Blankley and she was married twice. Her first husband was Thomas Mellott, who died many years ago. Her second husband was Isaac Conner, who died about seven years ago. She was the mother of fourteen children, twelve of whom survive.

The funeral services were conducted in Steven's Chapel Tuesday morning by Rev. G. M. Frownfelter of Clearville, assisted by Rev. J. H. Hilbish of Brezewood. Interment was made in the adjoining cemetery.

Henry C. Adams

Henry C. Adams, a well known citizen of New Paris, was taken to the Mercy Hospital at Johnstown, where he underwent the removal of a very much affected kidney on August 12. On the 19th he died at that institution from the effects of the same. His body was brought home and on the following Thursday services were conducted in the U. B. Church by his pastor, Rev. H. W. Bender, of the Lutheran Church of Schellsburg, assisted by Rev. A. Fyock of New Paris. Interment was made in the Schellsburg Cemetery.

The deceased was a son of Solomon and Nancy (Shrader) Adams and was aged 65 years, one month and eight days. In 1871 he married Miss Mary J. Dennison, who still survives. He is also survived by two adopted daughters, Mrs. Charles Smouse of Lutzville and Mrs. W. F. Hiner of New Paris, and the following brothers and sister: George W. Adams of Wells Tannery, Alexander of Wheeling, W. Va., John Q. of Johnstown, Daniel P. of Ryot and Mrs. Catharine Willis of Fulton County.

Mr. Adams became a member of the Lutheran Church thirty-nine years ago and remained such till death, leaving an evidence that he was prepared to meet his God in peace. Three of his nephews—S. E. Adams, C. A. Adams, W. R. Adams, two of his grand nephews, C. W. Cletes and John Cletes and a nephew of Mrs. Adams, E. E. King, acted as pallbearers.

Willis Mowry

The funeral of Willis Mowry of near New Buena Vista, this county, was held at Schellsburg Saturday morning, Rev. Christian Gumbert, pastor of the Reformed Church of that section, officiating. Interment was made in the old cemetery near Schellsburg.

The young man, who had been in ill health for some years, ended his life Wednesday morning of last week with a bullet, in a temporary fit of insanity. He was aged about 28 years and was a son of William H. Mowry of near New Buena Vista. Not being well Tuesday evening Dr. E. L. Smith of Schellsburg was called in and left some medicine. The next morning young Mowry, after reading the paper, went to his room and secured a revolver which had been loaded possibly ten years before; standing before the mirror in his room he fired a bullet into his right eye, death being instantaneous.

Ill health caused him to become very melancholy and he feared that he might injure some member of his family. He was a bright young man and a student, and was possessed of a large amount of money. Surviving are his parents and three brothers: Charles, Warren and Austin, all residing in that section.—Cumberland News.

State Camp P. O. S. of A.

The forty-eighth annual meeting of the Pennsylvania State Camp of the Patriotic Order Sons of America was held this week in the Mishler Theatre, Altoona, with over one thousand delegates in attendance. The reports of the various state officers showed that gain of 4,036 in membership for the year had been made, and the receipts during the year were $28,870.96, and expenditures of $24,710.50. A new building for the state camp headquarters will be secured in Philadelphia.

One of the big events of the meeting was the parade yesterday afternoon, in which thousands of members from all parts of the state took part. A special train carrying the Bedford County delegation was run yesterday morning from Saxton. The eight camps of this county were well represented.

Sewell W. Rouzer is the delegate to the convention from the local Camp.

Gets Sentence Reduced

Representative Warren Worth Bailey of the Nineteenth District has succeeded in getting the sentence of Arthur Davis, a coal passer in the United States navy, reduced from one year to three months. He had an interview with Secretary Daniels, and, after going over the case, the Secretary took Mr. Bailey's view, that the sentence was excessive, in consideration of the fact that young Davis, whose parents live at New Paris, had committed a comparatively trivial breach of discipline. As a result of Congressman Bailey's efforts the young man will be released about September 20.

DIED

McCREARY—Pearl, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles McCreary, died recently at their home in Mann's Choice. Besides the parents, eight brothers survive.

PUTT—Near Saxton on Monday, August 25, Edith, little daughter of Roy Putt of Havre, Mont. The little one's mother died when she was an infant and she has since lived with the grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Putt, of Saxton. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. F. W. McGuire on Tuesday.

Big Democratic Meeting at York

When the State Federation of Democratic Clubs meet in York, September 2, it will be the third gathering of its kind in the history of the organization and promises to be the best and largest attended of any of the meetings.

Already fifty of the clubs have notified State Secretary McNair that they have elected delegates and many more of the three hundred clubs in the state will elect delegates this week. The clubs of Pittsburgh, Scranton, Wilkes-Barre, Williamsport, Harrisburg, Reading, Lancaster, Rochester, Philadelphia, are among those that have already responded.

The business sessions will be held in the Court House, the morning session at 10:30 o'clock, and the afternoon at 2 o'clock. At 5:30 o'clock the Young Men's Democratic Society of York will entertain the visiting delegates, the officers of both the State Federation and State organization and the Congressmen from Pennsylvania, at a band concert and luncheon at the York Country Club. At 8 o'clock there will be a mass meeting in the High School auditorium, at which Senator Ollie James of Kentucky, permanent Chairman of the Baltimore Convention last year, will be the principal speaker.

All of the Democratic Congressmen from Pennsylvania will be present as will most of the members of the State Central and State Executive Committees.

York County is a stronghold of Democracy, the Young Men's Democratic Society of York having almost one thousand members, and they extend a cordial welcome to all Democrats to enjoy their hospitality upon this occasion.

Oldham and Rogers Family Reunion

The Oldham family had announced their fifth annual family reunion to be held on August 23 at Crumb. The Rogers family was arranging to hold their second reunion, when the two clans agreed to hold a joint affair on the above date. Everyone of the several hundred who assembled in the beautiful grove of Joseph Oldham appeared to be happy because he was present. Bountiful dinners had been prepared and when the noon hour arrived they were very much enjoyed not only by members of the two great families, but strangers as well. The sociability of the two families and of individuals was such that will long be remembered by all who were present.

After dinner the following program was carried out: Music by the Pavia Concert Band, the singing of Coronation by the assembly, reading of the 39th Psalm by Elder T. B. Mickel, prayer by Elder Levi Rogers of Ryot, address by Mrs. Clara Oldham of Johnstown who described in a very pleasant way her trip to Europe given by the Johnstown Democrat, recitation by Miss Rachel Rogers of Johnstown and was listened to attentively; address by E. B. Rogers of Dayton, O., who told about the destruction and suffering of the flood in that city; music by the band, address by Rev. J. W. Mills of Johnstown, after which the assembly sang, "God be With You Till We Meet Again."

At the business session the Oldham clan elected William H. Oldham of Johnstown, President; Mrs. Clara Oldham of Johnstown, Vice President; Nathan Oldham of Johnstown, Secretary; J. Hite Oldham of Johnstown, Treasurer. The Rogers clan elected J. A. Rogers of Johnstown, President; T. B. Mickel of Ryot, Vice President; Sewell Rogers of Ryot, Secretary; John Blackburn of Alum Bank, Assistant Secretary.

Prizes were won by a number of contestants in amusements, such as potato races, turtle races, foot races, ball throwing and nail driving. The Oldham family decided to hold its next annual reunion at the same place. No decision was reported by the Rogers clan as to what it would do.

Social Gathering

Never in the annals of social occurrences in Friend's Cove has anything surpassed the reception tendered Rev. Walter G. Pugh and his bride Tuesday evening, August 26, at the Reformed parsonage, by the members of the three churches, comprising his charge, and many of the friends from sister congregations.

Reverend Pugh and his wife, who before her marriage was Miss Mary Hertzler of Lancaster, returned from their wedding tour Tuesday afternoon and were literally taken by storm when nearly 275 of their friends arrived at about 7:30 o'clock to welcome them to their field of labor. The event partook of the nature of a Pound Party, and many generous donations were brought to the house.

After everyone had arrived, the usual serenade, to the accompaniment of cow-bells and other similar noise producing implements, was indulged in, and the minister fulfilled his part of the program by appearing on the porch with his bride and her twin sister, Miss Nancy Hertzler. The similarity in appearance of Mrs. Pugh and her sister was the cause of much confusion in distinguishing one from the other, and caused much amusement. During the evening cake was served and Mrs. Pugh most delightfully rendered several vocal selections.

No one present could help but feel the sense of hearty good fellowship that pervaded everything, and as those present grasped the hands of the bride and groom, and wished them happiness and success, they could not help but feel the joy of a true welcome.

May we let the same spirit always prevail. Let us continue, by our friendship and co-operation, to assist our new pastor and his most estimable wife in every work his position occasions, and may their efforts, with the help of us all, be a blessing to ourselves, as well as to the church and to the advancement of the kingdom of Christ among us.

Hugo Map Is Being Made.

The international map of the world, on a scale of 1 to 1,000,000, will, when completed, eight or ten years hence, cover a total area of about 150 by 75 feet, or the surface of a globe 40 feet in diameter.

Ball Covers Sewed by Hand.

So far no machine has been found to give satisfaction in sewing the covers on baseballs. Hundreds of thousands of balls are used every year, and they are all hand sewed. A man working his best can not finish more than three dozen a day.

Wall Vases.

Tall wicker vases and baskets of many shapes and sizes to hang on the wall are favorite flower holders. Grays, greens, pinks, browns and blues are only a few of the many colors seen.

The First Letter of Her Name

By ALBERT KENYON

One evening when I watered the horses and milked the cows and done all the other chores we farmers have to do I went into the house and got my supper. By the time I'd washed the dishes I was dead tired and, settling down in front of the fire, got to thinkin' what a lot o' work I had to do that was usually done by women. I could stand it all till it came to washin' dishes, and that I always hated.

There came a rap at the door and Cynthia Jones came in to ask me if I wouldn't lend her mother a quart of milk. The Joneses have the next farm to mine. There's one boy and five girls. I've often wondered what Farmer Jones'll do with all his girls. There's only one livin' at the farm, and that'll go to the boy. I went to the springhouse and got Cynthia the milk, and as I handed it to her she said:

"You're very comfortable here, Mr. Crabb, ain't you?"

"Well, yes," I answered. "I'm comfortable enough."

"Don't you ever git lonesome livin' all alone?"

"No, I don't git lonesome at all. You see, by the time I git the dishes washed it's perty nigh bedtime."

"Do you like dishwashin'? Most men don't."

"I hate it."

"Why don't you git a woman to do it for you?"

"I don't know anybody that would like to hire out for that purpose."

"You might marry some one. She could do all the woman's work—the sweepin', the cookin', the milkin' and all."

"I don't know any one that would marry me."

"You don't mean it! Why, there's lots o' nice girls would be glad of the position. I know a girl that would marry you and make you a good wife."

"Who's that?"

"Why, Mr. Crabb, you wouldn't have me tell you. She wouldn't thank me for doin' so. If she did it would be immodest of her."

"Is it Susan Park?"

"No."

"It ain't Melis Billings, is it?"

"No; I don't refer to Melis. But I won't give you any more guesses."

"Seems to me that's kind o' mean."

"I'll tell you what I'll do. Come in to our house Sunday night and I'll give you the first letter of her first name."

I made the call on Sunday evening and found all the family except Cynthia gone to church. There was a fire burnin' on the hearth, and the brass andirons shone beautiful. Cynthia had some apples and cider on the table waitin', and altogether everything looked mighty fine. Somehow I could never make my livin' room look like that, and I told her so. She said men couldn't do such things; only women could.

Cynthia made me feel so good that I forgot all about askin' her the letter she was goin' to tell me, and I went away without it. I met her on the road the next day, and I said:

"What was the letter you was goin' to tell me? I clean forgot it."

"You'll have to come for it next Sunday," she said as she hurried on.

I went the next Sunday night, and the first thing I did was to ask for that letter before I forgot it. Cynthia said she'd tell me just before I went home, only I was to remind her of it.

The family was mostly at home this time, and Cynthia took me into a little 6 by 9 room off the dinin' room. There was only one easy chair in it. Cynthia set herself down in that and left me a chair with a wooden seat. Toward 10 o'clock I got so tired I couldn't stund it any longer. I got up and walked about to rest myself, and Cynthia moved aside, and seem' she didn't intend to be mean about it. I set down beside her.

Would you believe it? I went away without thinkin' to remind her of the first letter of the girl's name who would like to marry me! I met her in a few days in the store and asked her for it, but she said I'd have to try it again and if I didn't remember this time she wouldn't tell me at all.

I went round the third time to get that letter and found not only the family at home, but a lot o' friends there. So Cynthia had to take me to a closet where they kept old books and magazines, and we set on the pile with our legs stickin' out into the hall. The closet was narrower than the easy chair we'd set in the second night I was there, and there wasn't no room for my arm, so I had to put it around her. We set there a-way from 7 till 10 o'clock.

"By cracky," I said jest as I was a-goin' away. "If I didn't pretty nigh forget ag'in to ask for that letter!"

Cynthia laughed and said that the first letter I had missed by not askin' for it at my first call and the second I'd missed on my second call. So I was only entitled to the third letter, which was "n." I didn't like that way o' puttin' me off and went back and set down ag'in to persuade her to tell me the whole thing. She wouldn't, but we had our heads perty nigh together, and a lock of her hair brushed my cheek. I kissed her. Then I said I didn't care a rap for all the letters of the other girl's name. I wanted her to come in and do the woman's work on my farm for me.

And, lawd, how we did kick up our heels at the weddin'!

New Parcel Post Will Require THOUSANDS MORE EMPLOYEES

The United State Civil Service will demand the appointment of approximately 35,000 additional employees during the coming year to handle the increased mail on account of the new Parcel Post Law.

The opportunities for positions in the Civil Service were never better.

Civil Service positions are desirable because the hours for work are not too long, salaries are good, positions—with proper conduct may be held for life, and promotions are frequent.

The greater number of appointments will be made in the Clerk-Carrier Service, the Railway Mail Service and the R. F. D. Service, to all of which any American over 18 years old is eligible by examination.

Post Office Service

The position of Post Office Clerk is open to both males and females. The position of carrier may be filled only by males. As a rule, carriers are appointed as substitutes, and while substituting receive a salary equal to that of the person for whom they substitute. On account of the contemplated increase in mail matter through the Parcel Post, the period for substituting will be lessened and the appointment made regular at the usual salary of $600 per year to start, with advance from year to year to $1200 per year. The salary of clerks vary from $600 to $1700 a year, according to the Post Office and the efficiency and length of service. Post Office clerks and carriers may qualify for promotion to the responsible position of Post Office Inspector or rural route inspector, which afford a salary of from $1200 to $2500 a year.

Railway Mail Service

The Railway Mail Service is one of the best branches of the service. The salaries start at $900 a year and increase from year to year to $1800 a year.

Railway Mail Clerks have charge of receiving, handling, distributing and delivering United States Mail matter on trains, steamers, etc. Practically every mile of railroad in the United States is now covered by this service, the total mileage, including steam and electric roads and steamboat routes, being over 245,000 miles.

The service is so extensive and gives employment to so many that necessarily a large number of changes, promotions, and new appointments are made every year. And because of the new Parcel Post Law the number of appointments will probably be larger this next year than any previous year. Consequently, this service affords a broad opportunity to alert, energetic men.

I. C. S. Instruction in the Railway Mail Service Course covers every question that may arise. The instruction given the student is so arranged so as to cover the particular railway division of which his state forms a part, and in which he desires appointment.

The position of railway mail clerk constitutes, moreover, a convenient stepping-stone to the highly desirable position of Post Office Inspector, for which salaries as high as $2500 a year are paid.

R. F. D. Service

The position of rural carrier is a very desirable one for persons that desire outdoor life and that want to engage in work not requiring a great deal of preparation. The salary of the rural carrier depends on the mileage of the route; all standard routes of 24 miles receive $1100 a year. Politics or religion have nothing whatever to do with the appointments; merit and qualifications of the applicant as shown by his examination, are alone considered.

The I. C. S. Instruction covering subjects of the R. F. D. Service is practical and complete. It will equip the student in the shortest possible time to take examination on the subject and to pass with merit.

I. C. S. Instruction Is Complete

The I. C. S. Course in Civil Service covers every question that may arise in a Civil Service examination. Our instruction is so thorough and complete that no one ambitious to secure a Civil Service position can fail to pass a satisfactory examination if he or she follows our directions. We give a series of examinations to each student during his Course, and the questions are for the most part those given by the Government in past examinations. Our instructions are in all cases specialized and suited to each individual.

I. C. S. Students Holding Civil Service Positions

There are many hundreds I. C. S. Students holding good positions in the Civil Service. Seven hundred and fifty notified us of their appointment to positions during a single year. Three times as many received appointment without notifying us. Some of them could barely read or write at time of enrollment. One man could not spell correctly two words in succession. Some never went to school more than two or three years. Others had not seen the inside of a school room for twenty years. And Yet All Succeeded. Why should you not achieve the same degree of success in the Civil Service as a result of I. C. S. training?

Mark and mail the attached coupon and we will send you free book giving names, addresses, and present positions of 700 I. C. S. students who are now holding Civil Service positions at good pay. We will also tell you how you too can enter this most pleasant and profitable employment.

Pleasant work—good salaries—position for life.

The Emigrants

A Story For Labor Day

By EVELYN C. GOODRICH

In what is called the Black forest in Germany lived a poor couple, Jacob Gaatz and his wife, who had but one child, a daughter, Gretchen, who was the main comfort of her parents. She and Hans Dreckel, the son of a blacksmith, were brought up together, each being the other's only companion, for the region in which they lived was sparsely settled, and no other family lived near them.

Jacob Gaatz was a woodcutter. When Gretchen was nineteen years old there came a great commotion in the family. Hans Dreckel one day met Gretchen on the road carrying a bundle of fagots and said to her:

"Gretchen, I have come to an important decision. I am young and strong and am not satisfied to remain here in the forest, where there is nothing for a man to do but cut wood. One can earn only money enough by so doing to keep body and soul together. For if we ask a better price our employers say to us: 'There are plenty of men who would like the work at the same price. If you are not satisfied we will employ others in your place.' I shall go where there are labor unions, and, since I hear that there are better prices paid in the United States of America, I shall go there."

Hans kept his eyes on Gretchen while he was speaking and saw hers gradually fall till they rested on the ground and were wet with tears. Till this moment Hans had never thought of Gretchen other than as a playmate and, after they were grown, as a friend. But now, when he saw the tears gather in her eyes because he was to leave her, a new sensation was born in his heart, a tenderness for the maiden with whom he had been reared, and, taking her in his arms, he kissed away her tears.

When Gretchen reached her home and threw the fagots beside the fireplace she sat down in a chair and covered her face with her hands. Her mother, who was washing the breakfast dishes, paused and said:

"What is the matter, Gretchen?"

It was a long while before the mother could draw from her daughter that Hans was going to that far country, America. But Gretchen did not tell her what was of far more importance to all of them—that he had asked her to go with him as his wife. It was hard for the poor girl to lose her companion and, since the announcement of his intended departure, her lover.

There would have been no cause for sorrow, but reason for rejoicing, if she could have yielded to his wish. This she could not do, for it would have been cruel for her to leave her old father and mother, who would now need her more and more every day. She only said that Hans was going to America, knowing that if her parents knew they were keeping her from going with him it would trouble them greatly.

When Hans found that Gretchen would not go with him he asked her to promise him that if her parents died she would come to him. But this was not much comfort to him, for on that condition his sweetheart was not likely to join him for many years. And, as for Gretchen, it meant that she must lose her parents in order to join her lover.

The day Hans departed he said to Gretchen: "You know that my father is old and cannot live long and my mother is not my own mother, but my stepmother. Father will never come to me in America, and when he dies mother will go to live with one of her own children. But there will be nothing to prevent your bringing your parents with you to my new home. They say money is made very easily there. A skilled laborer gets 12 marks a day. Out of that I can save 6 marks a day at least and can send this money to you so that you may all join me in—"

"Oh, Hans," exclaimed the girl, "you are so good, so hopeful, but you must learn to do something that will enable you to earn so much money, and in those countries where high wages are paid they say it costs more to live. But," she added, "I will come to you if I can ever do so without bringing sorrow to my dear father and mother."

Hans kissed her again and again, then strode away without once looking back, lest he should show the moisture in his eyes, which he considered unmanly.

Eight years passed, during which the lovers remained true to each other. In all this time there was never an interval of more than a month that Hans did not write to his sweetheart, and she always replied to his letter with her whole heart. Hans prospered and offered to send her money to bring over her parents, but she never even mentioned the matter to them. Nor did they know that they were keeping apart two young persons who but for them might be happy together and rearing a family of children. In all these eight years Gretchen never breathed a word to her parents of the sacrifice she was making for them.

One day when Jacob was cutting wood a fierce storm came up and blew a huge limb from a tree, burying him under it. He lived but a few days, when his wife and daughter found themselves without even the support of an aged woodcutter. Gretchen at once wrote to Hans announcing her father's death and in a few weeks received a reply. Folded in the letter was a paper which ordered a bank to pay her 300 marks. Hans told her to use it as she liked, either for support of herself and her mother or to bring her mother to him in America, where he and Gretchen might be married and her mother could live with them.

Gretchen, who was a prudent girl, with great self control, thought over Hans' proposition for several days before coming to a decision. When she had made up her mind as to the only course to pursue that would be justice to Hans she confessed to her mother that when he had gone to America he had refused to leave her parents.

"I am too old to go so far, Gretchen," said the old woman, "but I will not longer be a burden to you. Go to Hans. I will remain here."

It was a long time before Gretchen could persuade her that such a course was impracticable and that her mother could only repay the sacrifice that she and Hans had made by giving her consent to go to America. Hans had learned the mason's trade and was getting 12 marks a day for his work. But recently he had set up as master mason and employed men to work for him.

When the old mother became convinced that it was her duty to make the trip she consented, and the two sailed for America in the steerage of an ocean liner. They arrived at the port of New York in due time and expected to find Hans there to meet them. In this they were disappointed, but he had been there and had made arrangements for them to be admitted into the country by the emigrant authorities, pledging himself to take care of them, so that they should not be a burden on the people. He also left instructions for them to come to him in a neighboring city, with tickets on the railroad to take them there.

When Gretchen and her mother reached their final destination they learned the reason of his not having met them on the arrival of the steamer. A strike had been declared by a certain trade union, and other trades had been gradually drawn into the struggle between capital and labor, including the masons. Hans had great influence with the men of his trade and was exerting himself to persuade them to keep the peace, assuring them that by doing so they would certainly win every just demand.

On arriving at the city where Hans lived they carried all their bundles except one box, which, being too heavy for them, they left to be brought later to the address that had been given them. Hans had expected them to hire a conveyance, but the frugal life they had led had not prepared them for such extravagance. So they walked, Gretchen inquiring the way, and passed through a street that was filled with workmen. On a wagon a man was standing speaking to a crowd of laborers who had gathered about him. They stopped to listen to him, but could not understand him since he spoke in the English language. But they could see by the upturned, intent faces that he was producing a profound effect upon them.

"Let us go on," said the mother. But Gretchen seemed disposed to listen to the man, though she did not know what he was saying. In vain her mother tugged at her to get her to go on, but in spite of the urging she remained. It was only when the man ceased to speak and, getting down from the wagon, was lost in the crowd that Gretchen consented to pursue their way.

When they reached the house where Hans lived they found a suit of rooms on the second floor comfortably fitted up. They were received by a woman whom Hans had deputed for the purpose, who told them that Hans was very busy and they must make themselves at home till he came.

After awhile they heard a cheering in the street which seemed to be approaching the house and growing as it came nearer. Then there were shouts of "We've won! We've won!" The crowd stopped before the house where the two emigrants were, and a man stood on the steps for a few minutes, cheered by the crowd. Then he hurried up the stairs and burst into the room. He and Gretchen flew to each other's arms.

"Himmel!" cried the old woman. "It is the man on the wagon!"

Gretchen had recognized Hans the moment she laid eyes on him, though he was but little more than a youth when they parted and he was now a man and very much changed. Their meeting was a happy one in many respects. In the first place, the winning of the strike was a great advantage to Hans, who had feared enforced idleness, whereas now that it was settled he could proceed with work he had contracted for. Gretchen and her mother had completed a journey both dreaded, and their future comfort was assured.

There was no reason for haste or delay in the wedding, so Gretchen was called on to fix the day, and, inasmuch as she had no trousseau to prepare, she chose an early date, since Hans desired that they should all get settled down to their new life and he give his mind to his work. The bride and her mother had no friends in their newly adopted country, but the groom had a plenty. A number of bridal presents from them came in, some of them from well-to-do persons for whom Hans had constructed buildings, and they were quite valuable.

Hans is prospering and is considered one of the most reliable men in labor matters, he being always consulted before any important action is taken.

SHE LIKED SAILING.

So the Wise English Spinster Lived Up to Her Contract.

The following true tale is a most curious instance of living well on nothing a year without breaking the laws of the land. Many years ago a steam packet company of Liverpool wished to buy a piece of land which was owned by a "stay at home spinster," as her neighbors described her. She sold her land at a very low price, but insisted upon a clause being inserted in the agreement giving her the right at any time during her life to travel with a companion in any of the company's vessels.

When the agreement was closed she sold her furniture and went on board the first outgoing ship belonging to the packet company. For years this wise spinster lived nearly all the time upon one ship or another, frequently accompanied by a companion, according to the agreement. This was always a person who otherwise would have been a regular passenger, but who purchased her ticket at reduced rates by paying the spinster instead of the packet company. The company offered her more than twice the value of the land if she would give up her privilege, but this she would not do. Her reply was, "You got the land cheap, and I like sailing, so we both should be satisfied."

TENNYSON AND SCOTT.

Why the One Did and the Other Didn't Accept the Laureateship.

When Sir Walter Scott was offered the laureateship in 1813 he declined the post because, as he wrote to Lady Abercorn, "the necessity of writing odes twice a year is a difficulty which no one ought to encounter who has any poetical character to lose; at least I am sure I should find it insurmountable. The thing might be easily done in a decent sort of way as old Whitehead himself describes it:

"Whose muse obliged by sack or pension, Without a subject or invention, Must certain words in order set As innocent as a Gazette, Must some half meaning bait disguise And utter neither truth nor lies."

Tennyson received the letter offering him the laureateship one morning before he was out of bed. On rising he immediately wrote two replies, one accepting, the other declining the offer, and determined to consult with his friends at dinner which to tend. Ever afterward he would jokingly declare that he accepted the honor because Venables assured him that if he became laureate he "would always, when dining out, be offered the liver wing of a fowl."—London Chronicle.

THE DEACON'S
TIP

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.

Deacon Haskins was an active church deacon. He was a good man and a guileless man. He subscribed to and read a religious weekly, but so seldom glanced at any other sort that the trickery and wickedness of the outside world were almost a sealed book to him.

On a certain evening, however, and one to be remembered to his dying day, as the deacon was abroad with his kerosene can, he had a hunch to drop into the postoffice. It is doubtful if he had ever heard of the game of poker, and yet he felt that hunch as strongly as Senator Bailey might when holding four aces. Yes, there was a letter for him—a letter bearing the New York postmark.

It was from a market tipster. He wanted to do the deacon and several other persons a good turn by putting them next to a good thing. The stock of the Wild Cat silver mine, then selling at 7 cents on the dollar, was to jump to 60 within a month.

It was an alluring circular. One read it through a haze of greenbacks. It made one's blood run faster and his toes to snap. The preacher would have to preach no more, and the widow could go ahead and get her fur coat and auto.

"But it's speculation," sighed Deacon Haskins as he laid aside the letter. "Y-e-s," sighed the wife.

"We've got $500 in the house, you know. If we invested that we would make over $3,500 in a month. That's a big profit, Martha."

"It's a whopper, and I can't see wherein it's wicked to take advantage of the chance. It almost seems as if Providence sent it to us."

The matter was debated at great length, and the conclusion arrived at was that it couldn't be very wicked to speculate in silver stocks. They weren't food or clothing, and poor people couldn't be harmed.

"But don't send your order in," cautioned the wife when the other matter had been settled. "If you do some one is going to find out about it. You just go right up to New York and see this Mr. Nipper personally. If he looks honest leave the money with him. If he doesn't then bring it back. I have an idea he's a church member and all right, a Christian man wanting to do another Christian man a good turn."

"That's the way I feel," replied the deacon, and two days later he was face to face with Mr. Nipper.

Mr. Nipper looked honest. He had a face as open and frank as a yearling child.

He quoted Scripture. He was a church member and fully intended to go to heaven when he died.

He courted the fullest investigation into his life and actions since the day he was born.

Of course Deacon Haskins bought $500 worth of silver stock. He refused a cigar or a drink, but he did shake hands with great heartiness and whispered something about meeting Mr. Nipper in a better world than this.

"Martha, if that man hasn't as honest as the day is long then I can't read human natcher," was his report on arriving home.

"But is he a church member?" she asked.

"Why, he's one of the elders in the biggest church in New York city!"

And their confidence was childlike as they sat down to wait and the profit they were to make was figured out two or three times a day. You know how such speculations end. It was a staggering blow to the deacon and his wife. They hardly spoke for days and days. The neighbors saw a great change in them, but none got at the cause of it.

The reader must now jump things along for six months. One July day as the deacon was a mile from home, looking for stray hogs, he came upon an auto that had rammed into a fence from the bursting of a tire. There was only one man in the auto, and he was held in the fence by his foot.

It was Mr. Nipper. He was taking a little spin by himself from a summer hotel several miles away. He had made some changes in his appearance, but was almost instantly recognized. Such was the bitterness called up by sight of the man that the deacon went off his head. He pried the foot loose and then flung the man to the ground and walloped him till he begged for mercy. Then the walloper stopped to get his breath and walloped some more. It wasn't Deacon Haskins now. It was an enraged bull seeing red. He slammed and hit and battered and banged, and Mr. Nipper really had hard work to make him take $700 and go his way.

The deacon went home to tell his wife and put the money in the cupboard and then continued on to the parsonage. He made a clean breast of everything and then asked:

"Parson, do you think I can be forgiven?"

"Let's see," was the reply. "You put in $500?"

"Yes."

"And got out $700?"

"Yes."

"Ahem, ahem. If that $200 goes for a church bell and pew cushions I should say—"

"That I had a living chance?"

"Yes; that you had ninety-nine chances in a hundred."

And that was where the $200 went.

SPLIT ON A TOOTHBRUSH.

Their Points of View, Couldn't Agree: Hence the Clash.

When the tall girl found the mistress of the six room flat washing dishes she asked what had happened to Mary.

"Mary has left," said the housekeeper. "I insulted her yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, and at 11 she packed her trunk and skipped."

"We had a row over toothbrushes. Mary exhibited an unparalleled interest in toothbrushes. Every brush she came to was taken up and turned over and over and commented on admiringly or the reverse."

"Finally she came to mine. I could see at once that she liked it."

"Whose is this?" she asked.

"Mine," I said.

"She poured out a glass of water and dipped the brush in."

"Oh, well," she said, "I won't be afraid to use it, then."

"For a moment I stood there literally stupefied, but soon I saw that prompt action was necessary, and I caught Mary's arm in a painful grasp."

"Put it down this instant," I commanded. "Put it down."

"Mary drew back and withered me out of the corner of her eye."

"Dear me," she said, "how touchy some folks are! I never work for touchy folks."

"And so we parted. She seemed unable to get my point of view on toothbrush etiquette, and I seemed unable to get hers, so we thought it best to sever our relations."—New York Times.

Wren's Bomb For St. Paul's.

St. Paul's—old St. Paul's—once knew the effect of a bomb that actually exploded. After the great fire it was at first thought that the ruins might be repaired, but too much damage having been done it was decided to pull the fabric down—a task in which many lives were lost. To put an end to the tedious work Wren hit upon the idea of inclosing eighteen pounds of gunpowder in a wooden box and exploding it under the central tower. The result was to lift the arches some nine inches, so that the ruins "suddenly jumping down made a great heap of ruin in the place without scattering."

The architect proudly boasted that his powder box had lifted 3,000 tons and saved the labor of 3,000 men.—London Graphic.

"Celestial" as Applied to China.

Every one knows the epithet "Celestial" applied to China, but few know its origin. According to a very old legend, Tibet is a fragment of a planet, once peopled by a yellow race, which in some way became detached and fell on the earth. The dazed inhabitants of the fragment were uninjured and, cold and hungry, they made their way toward China, which they peopled. This origin of the Chinese race led to their calling themselves "Celestials," and it is for this reason that the emperor calls himself Son of Heaven. Such, at least, is the legend.—Toronto Globe.

INTERNATIONAL
SUNDAY SCHOOL
LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Director of Evening Department The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

LESSON FOR AUGUST 31

ISRAEL AT SINAI.

LESSON TEXT: Ex. 14:1-18.
GOLDEN TEXT: "Let us have grace whereby we may offer service well-pleasing to God with reverence and awe." (Heb. 12:28 R. V.)

The securing of water at Mount Horeb, the battle with the Amalekites and the visit of Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, are the intervening events between this and last week's lesson. A suggestion as to the historicity of the Exodus story is indicated in verse 1 of the lesson. "In the third month," these are not the words of an impostor but of the careful historian. The place, Mount Sinai, was a familiar one to Moses. It was at the base of this range of mountains, "at the back of the desert," that he had met and received his commission from God. (Ex. 3:1-12; Acts 7:30, 38.) Let us consider the entire chapter.

The Highest Source.
1. "A peculiar treasure," vv. 1-5. Thus far there has been no law to guide the Israelites except the word of God, by the mouth of the prophet. As a nation they must have laws and the proper time has now arrived to promulgate those laws. But it is necessary to impress the nation with the source, the sacredness and the strength of law. Its source is the highest—God; its sacredness is in the nature of its source—God; its strength is in the matter of their obedience.

"Moses went up" and "the Lord called." When we seek the place of separation from man and the place of communion with God we may expect to hear him calling us. (Jas. 4:8.) Once before God had called to Moses in this place (3:4) and Moses was taken by surprise. Now it is the man of experience who joyfully seeks the Lord that he may receive a message for his waiting people. God begins by reminding him of his acts in Egypt and at the Red Sea (v. 4) and by his figure, "eagle's wings," he emphasizes the fact that none else but Jehovah wrought this deliverance. Even as the eagle bears its young upon its wings so has he borne out of Egypt this nation which is as yet but a babe.

It is yet to be, however, his peculiar treasure and upon one condition only—obedience. They are to be a kingdom of priests, persons with a right access to God, spiritual sovereigns and a holy nation set apart to preserve the knowledge and worship of God if they obey his voice.

"A peculiar treasure," on the condition of obedience Israel was his peculiar people, how sad that they ever departed from that lofty privilege. In this present age it is the church which is called out to be a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation and the people for God's own possession. (1 Peter 2:9, 10 R. V.; Tit. 2:14; Eph. 1:11 R. V.; Rev. 1:6; 5:10; 20:6 R. V.)

11. A sanctified people, vv. 7-15. That the Israelites might believe Moses forever, God was to come and converse with him from a thick cloud. Before this took place, however, they must cleanse themselves, set guards about the mountain lest any draw too near and be put to death (v. 12). God's revelations to men are never made to those who with lust in their hearts cling to their sins.

Trumpet Not Material.
13. A wonderful revelation, vv. 16-25. God's descent was signalized by every object of grandeur and awe that imagination can conceive. The burning mountain suggests the consuming fire to the transgressors of the law about to be revealed. The booming thunder and flashing lightning amid the stillness of the wilderness would arouse universal attention, and has not the law thus attracted the attention of ages? The enveloping cloud reminds us of another mountain experience, see Matt. 17:5. The trumpet emphasizes the supernatural, that it was other than a material trumpet blown by human breath. Read in connection with this lesson Isa. 6. Our God is not alone a God of love but he is a being of infinite majesty and holiness, "a consuming fire," Heb. 12:29. Too often we have presented an emasculated God; we need to emphasize, in this day, both sides of his character. At least two locations are pointed out, each of sufficient area to accommodate those gathered under Moses' leadership (v. 17). Though he trembled (Heb. 12:21) yet he approached with confidence, I, John 3:21, this interview with God. No sinner had, he says, a little way to the mountain than he is ordered to turn in order to keep the people from breaking through the bounds to gaze, vv. 21, 22.

Summary. The murmurings at Rephidim (ch. 17) seem incredible so soon after the song of Moses (ch. 18) and the supply of manna (ch. 16), yet how soon darkness makes us forget the brightness of bygone light, imminent danger to forget previous deliverance. Man alone cannot cope with these emergencies; God alone can provide. God's revelation and declaration have in this dispensation been repeated in almost identical language to the heavenly people, the church of Christ. (1 Pet. 2:9. His methods, though seemingly stern, are these of grace and mercy.

Look Out That the Joke Isn't On You!

Following the recent floods in Ohio many once valuable farms were rendered almost worthless by washing away the top soil and leaving only a gravel bed.

One of the unfortunate owners of a gravel bed came home one day in great glee and full of laughter. His wife astonished, wanted to know the cause.

Well, the joke is on Bill Smith. I sold him the farm cheap and he thinks he got a bargain.

This reminds us of some people who buy Rugs and Furniture cheap, and think they are getting bargains.
